3 Key Ways to Keep Child Support Funds Flowing

By Detra D. Davis

3 Key Ways to Keep Child Support Funds Flowing by Detra D. Davis

If you are one of the millions of parents who receive sporadic child support payments, here are three strategies you can use to improve the untimely receipt of child support payments.

Caution: These strategies will not work for everyone, but remember nothing from nothing leaves nothing.

1. If you are to receive child support payments, insist the paying parent buy a life insurance policy covering the term of the payments, naming you as the owner and beneficiary. Your “ex” will be unable to change the beneficiary without your agreement. Try to have this court ordered at the time the child support order is established.

2. Take action if delinquent parents are consistently late or refuse to pay child support altogether. You may need an attorney or intervention from your local child support enforcement agency.

A measure you may want to take before seeking legal assistance is offering to renegotiate the amount of the child support order. This may sound unfair, even unheard of, but understand that if the amount set by the court does not realistically allow the paying parent to maintain a decent standard of living, the parent is more apt to stop working or leave the state. The question you must ask: Is it better to receive a slightly less amount consistently or a larger amount inconsistently or not at all. You and the paying parent are the only ones who will know if this option would work.

3. Allow the paying parent to use a variety of methods to pay child support. Child support for some parents is more than money. It may be food, clothing, recreational activities, daycare. If the paying parent is willing to provide pre-paid credit cards, gift cards from movie theaters, clothing stores, grocery stores, gas stations etc. all of these items provided, in addition to the court-ordered child support may assist in reducing arrears or assisting when the child support payments have been reduced.

Both parents should understand that together it is their responsibility to care for the well-being of their child, and both are responsible for keeping a record of all contributions made above and beyond the court-ordered child support payments. Court ordered child support payments are only necessary when one or both parents refuse to take responsibility for the financial welfare of their child. So...do the right thing.

One-On-One With A Dallas Child Custody Lawyer

By Low Jeremy

How can you win custody over your child?

Is there a need for you to have an ample amount of money to gain custody over your child?

Do you need to have a good house or house help so that the guardianship will be granted to you?

The above questions and more linger in your mind after rigorous divorce days. Above all the pain and sorrow you are feeling at this moment, the interests of your child is still your topmost priority.

In Dallas, child custody lawyers oftentimes advise their clients on how to win custody over their child. Here are some suggested ways that the court may look into for you to achieve the guardianship you desire:

1. Child custody lawyers often counsel their clients to start with the basic. Most often than not guardianship will be awarded to the parent who:

- Provides healthy meals for the child and ensures that the child is getting his meals on time.
- Knows how to bathe and dress the child. It is also important for the parent to support the child in toilet training.
- Teaches the child with basic academic learning as well as simple household chores.
- Appropriately discipline the child.
- Buying the immediate needs of a child both at home and at school.
- Makes quality time with the child. You can bring your child to a nature trip or to a place where you can bond with each other.

2. The child's welfare is oftentimes the major factor which will be taken into consideration by child custody lawyers and the court who will review the case.

To give you an idea how likely custody is being granted, here are some ways your lawyer should discuss with you:

- The child's desire which parent he opt to go. However this will matter on how the preferred parent can physically, emotionally, financially and even spiritually take care of his child.
- You and your child's relationship will matter. Does your child have a nurturing rapport with you? Are you the type of parent who will most likely punish a child with small wrongdoings?
- How your child will adopt with an old or new environment with a new family set-up.

- Parents' accessibility to the needs of the child. Normally the type of work can be a determining factor.

3. Your child custody lawyer should help you with the following matters:

- Gather documents and other pertinent data which can help prove that you as the parent of the child is capable of achieving custody. This will be helpful during custody assessment.

- He should be able to prepare you with one-on-one meetings with a mediator, mental health professional and other relevant key persons. Your lawyer may want to do some role playing so you will be familiarized with how the situation will work.

- He should make you ready with the possible outcome during mediation and litigation process.

You do not need to have millions in your bank account. You do not even need to hire house help to assist you with child rearing nor do you need a mansion. All you need to have is the dedication and commitment to raise your child in a home where love, care and support will be felt.

There is no price for love.
